

Wellesley Park Primary School – School Values

RESPONSIBILITY

What is the responsibility?

A responsibility is something that you are expected to do, or a way you are expected to act in a given situation. Being responsible leads to more trust and freedom because people know they can count on you to do the things you are expected to do. Being responsible can also be a big part of keeping you safe. It also means accepting the consequences of our actions.

| Key Vocabulary | Definition |
|----------------|--|
| freedom | The power to act, speak or think as you choose |
| expectation | Something people think you will do, or be |
| trust | To believe in the reliability, truth, or ability of someone |
| consequence | The result or impact of an action made, positive or negative |

Examples of skills

At Wellesley Park, we encourage everybody to take responsibility for their own actions and choices, from reception all the way through to year six. This enables us all to build strong, trusting relationships with one another, as we all know what is expected of us and have the freedom to act accordingly.

Why Wellesley Park think this value is so important

At Wellesley Park, we believe that responsible individuals readily accept the outcome of their choices without holding anybody else accountable, which is a skill that is essential for our children in later life. This is because if children can look back at the outcomes of their actions, especially if they're negative, they can create a strategy to prevent the same happening again. If all individuals are responsible, meaningful relationships built on trust can be made.
